Real Church Fans

Neil L. Kuns
August 25, 1994

Air-conditioning was a tremendous attraction when it was first installed in church buildings in the late 1950's. The church I served in Indiana added refrigeration to the air handling system in 1965. Hot under the collar Hoosier parishioners freely confessed to me that they could hardly wait to come to worship on sweltering Indiana Sundays. I also admit to being more willing to go to work at a comfortable church house on those days. Some pious people said that if God wanted us to be cool He would send that kind of weather. I was always curious as to why such complainers never offered that line of reasoning against fans, nor objected to heating the building in the wintertime.

At the conclusion of a service a couple of Sundays ago our cooling system was struggling to keep up with rising temperatures. I suggested that the people pick up their service bulletins and use them as fans. Most did so. Then I asked them to take the papers home and not to clutter the pews by leaving them on the seats. While the latter was my real intention, the sight of these good friends fanning themselves reminded me of the way it was in the "good old days" before refrigerated air was considered a necessity.

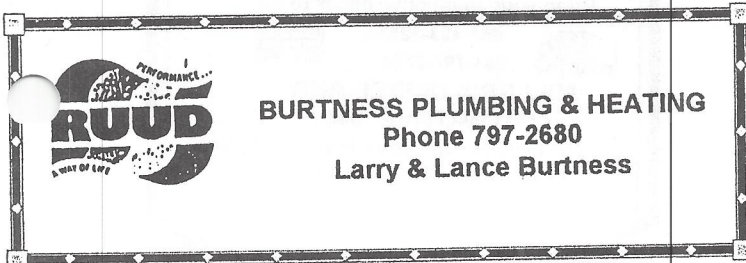

Every Spring about the time the heat and humidity began to break 80 on a regular basis someone in the Fertile church would dig up and distribute the church fans to the pew racks. The cardboard fans were shaped somewhat like a rounded tulip. A wooden handle about twice as long and wide as a popsicle stick was stapled to the back. The handle worked well for at least one season as long as the fanning didn't become too frantic. When the weather became too steamy even a fan without a handle or one which had been folded and become limp was better than sitting there all adrip.

Art work on the fans usually pictured Jesus walking on the water or praying in some cool-looking garden. I don't know if people were aware of sub-liminal messages back in those days but the scenes were wisely chosen. Who could feel cool if the picture on the fan was one of Shadrach, Meschak and Abednego in the red-hot fiery furnace or a view of the smoldering fires of Gehenna? The only message such images might give is, "Hey, it could be worse!"

Another thing that made me wonder was the establishment advertised on the back of the fan. Invariably it was a funeral parlor. Were they the only businessmen concerned about keeping church-goers comfortable during the summertime? Had they cornered the market for fans? Was there some nefarious monopoly controlled by the Amalgamated Morticians of America or the Federation of Faithful Funeral Directors? Why didn't the Fertile Co-operative Creamery think of doing this? It would seem that I could keep my mind on a sermon better by thinking about cool butter than about a bronze burial box.

You may have guessed that the sermons delivered in those days didn't exactly rivet my attention. I kept wondering, "How much longer is he going to talk?" Besides, I was trying to determine whether the "fan-as-fast-as-you-can" technique or the "make-large-slow-circles" approach would keep one more comfortable. Now that I'm on the other side of the pulpit I try to keep my words interesting enough to seem to be brief. I also keep those fans out of the pews. From my own experience I know they can be distracting.

- > If you can always be cheerful, ignoring aches and pains,
- > If you resist complaining and boring people with your troubles,
- > If you can eat the same food every day and be grateful for it,
- > If you can understand when your loved ones are too busy to give you any time,
- > If you can overlook it when those you love take it out on you when, through no fault of yours, something goes wrong,
- > If you can take criticism and blame without resentment,
- > If you can ignore a friend's limited education and never correct him/her,
- > If you can resist treating a rich friend better than a poor friend,
- > If you can face the world without lies and deceit,
- > If you can conquer tension without medical help,
- > If you can relax without liquor,
- > If you can sleep without the aid of drugs,
- > If you can honestly say that deep in your heart you have no prejudice against creed, color, religion or politics,

Then, my friend, you are ALMOST as good as your dog!!
