V. E. Day

Neil L. Kuns

May 8, 1995

Fifty years ago today President Harry S. Truman announced to the nation that the German generals had surrendered, and that the Allies had finally won the war in Europe. Victory in Europe for which so many had prayed and sacrificed was at last a reality. This news generated great rejoicing then, and gives rise to grateful recollection now. I remember less of V. E. Day than of V. J. Day that followed later that summer when Japan capitulated. What does stick in my mind is the deep longing for victory during the months and years that preceded the end of the war.

My parents frequently got together socially with Hank and Janet Van den Bosch and with Art and Ione Grooters. Both of these families were of Dutch extraction, and thus were in closer emotional contact with Europe than were my Dad and Mom. During those evenings the two or three families visited in each others home and enjoyed coffee and pastries. The women brewed coffee in the then popular two-part glass vacuum pot. Steam forced the water from the bottom into the upper part containing the ground coffee. When all the water was in the top the pot was removed from the heat, and the vacuum caused by the cooling of the lower part drew the water back down through the coffee and the filter. Mrs. Van Den Bosch frequently served ice-box cookies that we came to call "Dutch cookies."

One evening at the Van den Bosch home the conversation turned to the topic of German atrocities recently reported in the newspapers. There were times during the six years of war when the Allied armies were taking heavy losses and making slow progress. On such pessimistic occasions the talk turned to our chances of winning the conflict.

With a voice draped in desperate hope Janet Van den Bosch said, "We just have to win this war. Heh, life just wouldn't be worth living if we lose." ("Heh" was a Dutch expression that approximated, "heck" or "hey".)

Ione Grooters was no less Dutch than Janet, but was less convinced of the worthlessness of life in the event of defeat. What I remember of that conversation are the deep emotions. Perhaps it was the first time I had considered any outcome other than victory. I reasoned that if our cause was right we would win. To me the adage was "Right makes might," not the other way around. Perhaps that was merely the naiveté of a twelve-year old boy.

The tide of battle seemed to turn from the Axis and Nazis to America and her Allies soon after that evening of serious discussion. I do not remember ever hearing another conversation so heavy with the anxiety of possible defeat. Perhaps the adults did not intend for me to hear the words that so intensely etched their way into my mind. Perhaps the next time my parents and their friends discussed the war I was engrossed in my own battle at the carom board. Although I lost more than one game of caroms or cards when others cheated, I still believe that right will be the ultimate victor, don't you? V. E. Day reinforces that conviction.

Dear Reminder Gals,

Thanks to all of you for bringing the wonderful news to us each month. It is my favorite paper. That's why we recognized your paper at our 50th class reunion in June.

Keep up the exceptional work.

WORTH JOINING GENERATIONS MENTORING PROGRAM

Worth Joining Generations is the new mentoring program. Worth County funded through a grant from Iowa Department of Public Health. Worth County Public Health is looking for adults to be mentors. You may ask what is a mentor? A mentor is someone who is a good listener and someone who cares and wants to help young people bring out strengths that are already there. Someone who provides young people with support, counsel, friendship and a constructive example. All children can benefit from positive role models; young people are looking for someone to listen to them and support them. The program is looking for mentors for the age group of 5-17 for children of all of Worth County. The commitment of one hour a week (four hours monthly) for at least a year could make a difference in a child's life and also benefit yours.

Research has shown that children who participate in a mentoring program have higher self-esteem, are more likely to do well in school, develop positive social skills and are less likely to use drugs or alcohol.

Anyone interested in more information, wishing to be a mentor or would like a presentation for an upcoming meeting of their organization, please contact Sonya Dahle or Kelli Dorsey, RN, program coordinators of Worth Joining Generations at the Worth County Public Health Department,

Worthwood. Contact phone numbers are 641-324-1741 or 1-800-765-1388.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ABOUT MENTORING

What is a Mentor?

Someone who provides young people with support, counsel, friendship, reinforcement, and a constructive example. A good listener and someone who cares. Someone who wants to help young people bring out strengths that are already there.

What does a Mentor do?

Helps connect children and youth with resources, safe places and structured activities. Provides a positive role model, assistance in obtaining a marketable skill through support of education, and an opportunity to give back through community service.

Why is being a Mentor important?

Young people are looking for someone to listen and support them. Providing guidance and structure to a young person allows them an opportunity to develop self-esteem and self-confidence. Youth who met with their mentor weekly for one year were 46% less likely to begin using illegal drugs, 52% less likely to skip school, and 33% less likely to get into fights. Students with mentors report greater confidence in their performance at school and better relationships with their families.

Who needs Mentors?

All children can benefit from positive role models. Some young people do not have positive adults or peers in their families and need to reach outside their home.

What are some things I should consider if I want to be a Mentor?

The age and number of youth you want to work with. Elementary, middle school, or high school age children. One youth or several (mentoring one child one-on-one versus coaching a group of young people) The setting that you may want to mentor in: school, community, church or business.

How much time is required to be a Mentor?

Time commitment can vary depending upon the program that you become involved with. It is highly recommended that a mentor and mentee have meetings on a weekly basis for one hour, lasting at least one to two years. Time commitment provides the opportunity for a positive consistent relationship to develop.

CHUNKY POTATO SOUP

From Roxanne

This sounds like a good winter day soup!

- 3 medium red potatoes      2 cups water
- Crushed red pepper flakes    1 small onion
- Ground black pepper          3 cups Milk
- 3 Tablespoons butter          1 teaspoon sugar
- 3 Tablespoons flour            1 cup shredded cheddar

1 cup cooked cubed ham.

Cut potatoes in 1 inch cubes & boil until tender. Drain but reserve the liquid. Set aside
