Too Many Melons

©Neil L. Kuns

November 28, 1995

"Let me live in a house by the side of the road and be a friend of man." This beautiful poetic thought would never have been written by anyone who lived in Los Angeles within ear-shot of the San Diego Freeway. In simpler, slower days a house beside a road had some advantages, especially if one had something to sell to those who were passing by on their way elsewhere.

During the late 1930's, the Thompson family lived on the farm south of the first bend of Iowa state highway number nine northeast of Fertile. In those days near the end of the Great Depression families were scratching out a livelihood by any possible means. The Thompsons planted watermelons and cantaloupes as a summer cash crop. To protect their ripening fruit from nocturnal raiders they rumored it around town that Mr. Thompson had injected some of the melons with a laxative-like chemical that would make anyone who stooped to steal the fruit very sorry indeed. The ruse and rumor worked. No one risked filching fruit that might affect him like an overdose of stewed prunes.

Iowans called the cantaloupes "muskmelons" and maybe the two fruits are the same. The plants flourished in the hot humid weather and the rich Iowa soil. By early August the melons were ripe and ready to harvest and sell. In previous years the family did a brisk business by displaying the melons on a wagon parked along the highway by their farm. This was their intention that summer also. There was only one "flaw in the slaw," as some describe a problem. The State Highway Department chose that time to resurface the highway and detoured traffic away from their frontage. The fruit was ripe and the Thompsons had to act quickly or lose their harvest and hope of profit.

Their predicament would have been even worse had they built a permanent fruit stand. They would have been stuck with their stand by the side of a road that no one was using. Since they displayed their produce on a flat-bed farm-wagon they merely pulled it through their field to a spot by the side of another road that goes east out of town. Opening up the gate to the driveway by that road they were ready for business at a new location. We learned something about the laws of supply and demand that Sunday afternoon. Word wafted around town as to their new location, and that the Thompsons were selling their melons cheap. Soon many of the townspeople hurried out east of town to check-out the situation. When you have too many melons you can give away generous sample slices to whet the appetites of any would-be buyers. The fruit was wonderfully sweet and "musky" -- as good as it smelled. Juice dripped from the chins of those who munched the wedges of muskmelon. They asked for only a dime a melon, and at that price the most frugal of their friends could enjoy the bounty. Mom and Dad bought several, and we had a juicy feast later that evening.

The detour on the highway did not deter the Thompson family from peddling their fruit. They made themselves a profit and made their neighbors happy at the same time. They lived in a house by the side of the road, and they proved themselves to be friends, as did the people who flocked to buy their produce and to solve their problem.

THE CLOTHESLINE

A clothesline was a news forecast to neighbors passing by. There were no secrets you could keep when clothes were hung to dry.

It also was a friendly link, for neighbors always knew if company had stopped on by to spend a night or two. For then you'd see the fancy sheets & towels on the line; you'd see the company tablecloths with intricate design.

The line announced a baby's birth to folks who lived inside, as brand new infant clothes were hung so carefully with pride.

The ages of the children could so readily be known, by watching how the sizes changed, you'd know how much they'd grown.

It also told when illness struck, as extra sheets were hung; then night clothes, and a bathrobe, too, haphazardly were strung.

It said "Gone on vacation now" when lines hung limp & bare. It told, "We're Back!" when full lines sagged, with not an inch to spare.

But clothes lines now are things of the past, for dryers make work less.

Now what goes on inside a home is anybody's guess.

I really miss that way of life, it was a friendly sign,

When neighbors knew each other best by what's hung on the clothes line.

A German, an Italian and a Norwegian were trying to get into the stadium at the World Olympics at Montreal, but the seats were all sold out. The enterprising German stripped down to his shorts and undershirt, picked up a cane fishing pole in a nearby alley, and marched right in, stating boldly, "Heinrich Schneider, Germany, Pole Vault..

Noting the successful ploy, the Italian took off his outer garments, grabbed a large round stone, then just as boldly strode in the gate, announcing, Pasquale Galento, Italy, Shot Put."

Not to be outdone, the Norwegian took off all but his BVDs, went into a nearby hardware store where he purchased some barbed wire. As he approached the gate the Norwegian spoke out confidently, "Hjalmar Olson, Norway, fencing."

When Ole's mother-in-law died, he and Lena were discussing what kind of tombstone to get for her. Said Ole, "Well, I think we should get vun dat is good and heavy."

From Main Street To Mother Road To Fond Memory.

In many ways, Route 66 is the story of America in the 20th century. In 1927, the National Highway System began linking the roads wandering across the country. Seeing a way to link big cities and rural towns, folks from Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California helped Route 66 come to life by nicknaming it the "Main Street of America."

During the Great Depression, thousands of Americans traveled Route 66 as they fled the Dust Bowl of the Midwest for opportunity in California. This was why the highway was later dubbed the "Mother Road" by John Steinbeck in The Grapes of Wrath. Thousands of unemployed workers completed paving all 2,448 miles of Route 66, as part of the New Deal, in 1937.

After World War II, tourists flocked to Route 66 to see America's sights, like the Grand Canyon and Petrified Forest National Park. Auto camps, tourist homes and cottages sprang up beside all sorts of roadside attractions and oddities. It seemed everybody wanted to "get their kicks on Route 66" as Bobby Troup wrote in his famous song. During the '60s, Route 66 was even depicted in its own TV series.

Over the years, interstates slowly replaced the old highway, and by 1984, one of America's greatest roads was officially decertified. These days, you won't find Route 66 on any official maps. Now it's like a lot of the great places in America, hidden away and just waiting for someone to go looking for it.

A Norwegian girl competed with a French girl and an English girl in the Breast Stroke division of an English channel swim competition. The French girl came in first, the English girl second. The Norwegian girl reached shore completely exhausted. After being revived with blankets and coffee, she remarked, "I don't want to complain, but I tink those other two girls used their arms."

Ladybug Crises

If you are willing to have your house smell of camphor and menthol try simmering a medicated rub (Ben-Gay or a less expensive version) in some water in an electric popouri pot. The bugs do not like that smell. Camphor oil or spirits available at drug stores can be used on cotton balls and left in the corners of windows where bugs may be getting in. Watkins Menthol Camphor Relief Mist and Menthol Camphor/Medicated Ointment can be used by spraying on areas where multicolored Asian Lady beetles congregate, especially in cracks and crevices that could provide access to the inside of your house.

For exterior spraying use a Pesticide containing one of the following:
Bifenthrin, Deltamethrin, Cyfluthrin, Tralomethrin, or Esfenvalerate.

"Well, thank goodness they're giving up on this bill - it's their final notice."
