My house and home

By George Kisner

Well, things went on for a few weeks and I constantly found more things that needed my attention. It is a large house with a basement and upstairs, and even an attic which needed checking.

First, I found a mouse in the basement caught in a trap and took it up to the living room to show everyone. I expected to receive great acclaim, but instead, Harried was upset and said "Get that thing out of here.!" Another night I found a bat flying around and it took all my feline abilities to grab it. George was helping me and though he was very glad when I caught it, he could not understand the process of letting it go so it could be caught again. Much to my chagrin, he got hold of it and took it outside to fly away. These people certainly need a lot of training! They need to get a life! Their time is mostly spent watching TV or sleeping, and this is something I will simply not tolerate! As everyone knows, the best time to prowl is in the middle of the night, and I usually go to their bed and jump on their stomachs to alert them of that fact. Oddly enough, they do not appreciate it, nor does the dog, Muffin.

Once I brought in a live mole for them to play with and another time a small bird, but they do not understand what is fun. Muffin displays a certain amount of clumsy interest, but everyone else just wants to put them outside.

The one time when they wanted me to assert myself was when I discovered a squirrel in the attic! I was up there one day checking for bugs and mice, when suddenly I felt I was not alone! I looked around and there, over close to the eaves, sat a small brown squirrel! I walked over to see if he was friendly, but he quickly vanished down a hole. Quickly, I called George and showed him the spot, I was put in the attic several times to try and catch the squirrel, but he was much too quick and they had to put tin over the hole where he was getting in.

MY MOTHER'S CHICKENS

By George Kisner

My parents raised their 5 children on a small farm about 4 miles from Fertile, Iowa from 1928 to 1950. My father raised corn, oats & hay and had cows, pigs and horses. My mother raised chickens, and as I look back, I think she did more to support the family with her lowly chickens than my father did with his important cows and pigs. Every spring she would order 100 straight run (half hens and half roosters) from a hatchery in Independence, IA. They would come by mail in large flat boxes with holes to let in air. We would go to the post office to pick them up, and you can imagine the cheeping going on in the building. My mother would get them home to the brooder house with the oil brooder stove which kept the temperature at about 80 degrees, unless the thermostat stuck and then it could be anything. She would carefully lift out each chick and dip its beak in water before setting it free. These were one day old chicks and had never eaten or drank. The brooder house was close to our small family house and she would go out several times at night as well as in the day to look after her brood. Many years she would raise more than 100%, since the hatchery would usually enclose 2 or 3 extras.

When the chickens were about 6 weeks old, she would sell off the roosters weighing about 3 pounds as fryers to a place in Clear Lake. By that time they would have been moved into a much larger house and would be allowed to run freely about the farm. It was a very important day for her to "sell chickens" because then she would have money to spend for much needed school clothes for us 5 children.

One of my uncles, Claude Kisner, lived with his 4 children over by Mason City. My Aunt Celia would sometimes come and visit my mother for a day or two, bringing with her my cousin Mary Lou, a special child. No one was more loved and better cared for than Mary Lou. At that time, they were not allowed to attend school, but her 3 brothers included her constantly in everything, and she was her mother's shadow. She had a special love for chickens, and when she came to visit us, she would constantly be out talking to the chickens and petting them. On one of these visits, my mother was selling her chickens. While the chickens would roam freely in the day, they would always go into their chicken house to roost at night. When they were to be sold, my mother would simply go out after dark and close the chicken house door. On one such occasions, Aunt Celia and Mary Lou were visiting. I was in school at the time and left early in the morning on the bus. When I returned home that afternoon, there were the chickens happily scratching and roaming the yard. I rushed into the house asking "what happened? Didn't the truck come this morning?" There was a dead silence for a time and then Aunt Celia said "The chickens had a visitor early this morning." My mother said, "Yes, Mary Lou went in the chicken house to see them and left the door open." It sounds trivial in our modern high-speed world, but believe me, it was a much discussed event in our simple farm life. Recently, at a family reunion, I told the chicken story. We all turned to Mary Lou, the same sweet child she was 60 years ago, and asked her if she remembered doing that deed. The huge grin she gave everyone left no doubt that she not only remembered, but was also proud of the day she saved the chicken's lives and let them live one more day!
